Acknowledgment

1. Receipt of the amendment filed 5/30/06 has been acknowledged and entered. Claims 1-9, 13-14, 16, and 19 are canceled. The office is withdrawing all objection and claims rejections in view of the amendment. However, the office finds the IDS filed 5/30/06 contains a non patent literature document that may be applicable to the claimed invention. The rejection is fellow.

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

2. The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claims 10-12, 15, 17, 18, 20-22, 24-27, 29, and 31-34 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Cheng in view of JP-Final Office Action (JPFOC)

Cheng teaches substantially all that is closed including:

- a. a ball screw nut 72,
- b. a bearing 76, and
- c. a presser member 80 abutting the bearing and having a female thread for engaging with a male thread of the ball screw nut (the presser member is understood to have been rotatably screwed onto the ball screw nut by some type of tool for putting together the pads of the steering system and wherein the presser member is attached to the ball screw nut in the normal way threaded components are attached to each other, as recited in claim 20, i.e., by not causing a deformation).

Cheng does not specifically disclose a connecting device capable of limiting a relative rotation between the presser member and ball screw nut, the function of limiting a relative rotation being performed after the threads are fastened, despite loss of bonding force between the threads by means of a shearing force of resinous material that could serve as a filler coated on the threads of the presser member.

JPFOC discloses that it would be obvious or routine manner used by those skilled in the art to "inhibit looseness by caulking a part of a nut to a bolt side.

Based on the teaching of JPFOC, it would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art at the time the invention was made to modify the presser member and ball screw nut of Cheng to include the caulking of JPFOC so as to provide a means to limiting a relative rotation between the presser member and ball screw nut.

Since the resulting structure of the modified Cheng device would result in all the method steps of claim 33 and 34 having been performed, those respective method steps are met by the combination just discussed.

3. Claim 23 is rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Cheng as modified by JPFOC as applied to claims 21 above and further in view of Wallace.

The modified Cheng vehicle discloses all of the claimed limitations except for the use of filler coated on a thread of the presser member. Wallace discloses the known use of a resin to lock a threaded coupling.

Art Unit: 3611

It would have been obvious to modify Cheng, by using a resin lock, as taught by Wallace to prevent loosening of the presser member since Cheng discloses the use of a 'lock nut' and since Wallace teaches that the use resin is desirable to oppose separation of threaded members, and because the prevention of loosening of the presser member is clearly desirable in a critical device such as a steering system.

Response to Arguments

4. Applicant's arguments filed 5/30/06 have been fully considered but they are moot in view of new ground of rejection.

Allowable Subject Matter

5. Claim 35 is objected to as being dependent upon a rejected base claim, but would be allowable if rewritten in independent form including all of the limitations of the base claim and any intervening claims.
